

The Pluto Observer

Watchdog to the Solar System

Earth Edition

April 2010

Blood Money

No one in America seems to get it but we think they get it in the United Kingdom and in Canada. We Plutonians get it. We've always gotten it.

Now that the U.S. House of Representatives has passed the new HealthCare Reform Bill by a winning vote of all Democrats defeating all Republicans, we're waiting to see what's left of the bill when the Senate gets done with it and it becomes law.

One thing for sure, we Plutonians know for a fact that whatever benefits come out of the new HealthCare Law, Americans will still be buying their health care from medical merchants. Maybe health care in the United States won't be business-as-usual but it'll still be Big Business. Very big business.

Tip-of-the-Hat

The Pluto Observer would like to take this opportunity to doff our space helmets to U.S. President Barack Obama for having what it takes to fight the Republican Fat Cats and all the American "Haves" on behalf of all the American "Have-Nots". Yours was a job very well done.

April BOTM Award

We at the Observer voted unanimously to award this month's Backhand-of-the-Month Award to everyone in the United States who tried to turn the current healthcare reform movement into a racial battle. Playing a trump card that's not even in the deck is even stupider than thinking that your luck as one of the "Haves" in that country will never run out.

A Blessing in Disguise?

Out here on the ninth planet it sure looks like a blessing for American auto buyers that a Texas man was recently arrested for allegedly using the Internet to disable the starters and to honk the horns of automobiles recently sold at the Texas auto dealership where he used to work.

Maybe someone should thank the dealership for firing him from his job and maybe the Feds should drop the Internet Security felony charges against him. Maybe everyone should focus on the fact that cars today can be disabled by hackers and fix that problem first. That's how we see it.

Indonesian Unrest: Vision of American "Things to Come"?

Last month's rock-throwing rally outside Indonesia's parliament building in Jakarta may be more than a simple demonstration by angry Indonesians over their country's $750 million bailout of Century Bank in 2008. It may be heralding in a new era of irresponsible governments, the failing businesses that depend on them for fiscal security and the outraged citizens who tire of watching healthcare tax money and food tax money and job tax money going down the toilet. Heads Up, America! You're not immune.

In the next issue of The Pluto Observer

☞ How to quickly spot the difference between spring "peepers" and alien frog people.

☞ If you think Pluto is a planet, you're not alone: A new international movement to restore the solar system.

☞ Fred Fortune and The Mars Homeless Underground.