Tip-of-the-Hat

A big Plutonian tip-of-the-hat to former U.S. President Bill Clinton for telling the American media that the 2008 Presidential Campaign in that country is not about race or any superficial differences between the candidates. He also accused the U.S. media of "taking the campaign away from the people" by focusing on mud-slinging, accusations of racial slurs, and everything political except the real issues. The U. S. media, of course, didn't understand a word of what Bill Clinton was saying to them. Maybe that's because, like most reporters and journalists in the U.S., their minds were too busy scouring America's gutters for the really big story.

Backhand-of-the-Month Award

We at The Pluto Observer would like to flesh out our tip-of-the-hat to former U.S. President Bill Clinton by bestowing the Backhand-of-the-Month Award for February 2008 on the American media for not only "not getting it" but for trying to call the kettle black by attempting to make Bill Clinton out to be the bad guy.

A Big Little Story

The Pluto Observer doesn't have any awards to bestow on the American television cable news networks for spending so much time on the recent non-life-threatening Monte Carlo hotel and casino fire in Las Vegas. But, if we did, it would certainly be one bestowed unanimously and with equal disdain for their unconscionable waste of air time on such an unnewsworthy story as that one. In America, where everything that glitters is believed to be gold, Las Vegas, Nevada, and everything in it, has been consecrated as holy ground by that country's misguided and hedonistic population.

It Gets Worse

One cable news network in the United States aired a January report about Haitian mothers feeding their children mud pies because they have no food. That story was followed by one about the richest man in India, a guy who has 160 vehicles and whose home is a skyscraper. Meanwhile, Americans still dance the jig in ridiculous TV commercials while sucking down pizza and burgers.

Tip-of-the-Day

"All that glitters is not gold, except in America."

Watchdog Alert

In the aftermath of the December 27, 2007 shooting and bombing in Rawaipindi, Pakistan that left Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto dead, her widowed spouse is alleging that a government conspiracy led to her assassination. Whenever a leader is murdered by his or her own people during violent civil disobedience and that nation is also a member of the global nuclear clubhouse, it's time for the United Nations to make that country number one on their list of volatile places in the world worth watching. Then Iran, South Korea and India, in that order.
